PRESS AND TRIBUNE.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, JANUARY 12, 1859. United States Senator from Maine. The Legislature of Maine has again given to the country the high statesmanship and integrity of Hon. Wm. Pits Pessenden—relecting him to the Senate of the United States for the term of six years from the 4th of March next. Mr. Fessenden is acknowledged by friends and foos to be one of the strongest debaters, and at the same time one of the most accomplished gentlemen in the Senate, while in earmest devotion to the cause of freedom he holds a place second to nobedy whomsoever.

Notsithstanding the generally expressed opinion that the Hog crep of the Northwest was exhausted for the present season, our results of Hogs during the pass week show an increase, both as regards quantity and quality. The receipts of Live Hogs were 2.181, and Dressed, 7.099—showing a total of 9.280 head against 6.994 the week previous, which make the receipts of the season foot up as follows:

The number of Hogs packed up to the 1st sided.

Idourned time we have a surplus left to be packed and used in the city of over 8,000 Hogs. At this rate, there is little doubt but our season's left. and used in the city of over 8,000 Hogs. At this rate, there is little doubt but our season's packing will amount before the close to 175,000 Hogs. We will probably receive Hogs, more or less, up to the month of March, and it will not take a great many to swell the packing to the figures above stated. Hogs, more or less, up to the monun or amount and it will not take a great many to swell the packing to the figures above stated.

Recently another great line, the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago railway, has been opened. Philadelphia and Battimere are this trought in close and direct communication with our city and the Northwest, and no man can estimate the influence which this great thoroughfare is destined to exact on Weslard progress. Every new competing line to the scabbard cheapens the transit of goods and produce East and West, and what is better secondary in the people along the routs to risit our rich, ferfile prairies, where thousands of them find pleasand, prosperous houses. The Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago Road will also compete for the trade and travel to New York and New England, and it is even elained that the route is shorter to New York than by the Michigan Southern and Gentral lines. impudence of the thing is eminently suggestive of our Squatter S overeign.

Our information or necessing the Anti-Lecompton Democratic outside of Illinois, and superially those of P emsylvania and Indiana, tends altogether to the conclusion that they want no excuses for having botted the nominations of their policy is that which Douglas himself opec taught—though then applying it to the friends, instead of the enemies, of Free Kantas—to "fight and crush." They go in for an overthrow of the pro-slavery schemes of the Administration, final and counsider. They are angling for no Presidential nominations, and care not a rush whether their cantage is a second of the countries of the superime court, the Democratic policy is the pro-slavery schemes of the superime Court, the Democracy induged the professional and an extension of the countries of the superime Court, the Democracy induged the professional and an extension of the countries of the superime countries of the superime countries to the proper committee, and overthrow of the pro-slavery schemes of the Administration, final and countries.

They are angling for no Presidential nomination, and care not a rush whether their cantage is the proper committees. They would be found adhering, by a large majority, to the latter. This, Mr. Douglas knows full well; and his speech to the Qu knows full well; and his speech to the Qu knows full well; and his speech to the Qu knows full well; and his speech to the Qu knows full well; and his speech to the Qu knows full well; and his speech to the Qu knows full well; and his speech to the Qu knows full well; and his speech to the Qu knows full well; and his speech to the Qu knows full well; and his speech to the Qu knows full well; and his speech to the Qu knows full well; and his speech to the Qu knows full well; and his speech to the Qu knows full well; and his speech to the Qu knows full well are the proper committee.

scribed or regulated by hw. Thus ends a small matter.

The lobby is continually througed with the Democratic politicians who are endeavoring to persuade the Legislature to force a Lecompton Constitution upon Chicago, in defiance of the well known wishes of the people thereof. The boldness of their proceedings is equalled only by their impudence. As their numbers increase by accessions from your city, their courage rises, and they have now assumed a tone that can be paralleled only by some of the Border Rollian procedure.

My son, be this thy simple plan: Serve God, and love thy fellow m.m.; Forget act in temptation's hour, That sire lends sorrow double power; Oou. It file a reface thor thy way, And follow conscience, come what may allie with haven and earth it were. With hand and brow and bosom clear, "Fear food—and knew no other fear." THE MANCHESTER MARRIAGE. Mr. and Mrs. Openshaw came from Manchester to London and took the House ToLet. He had been what is called in Lancas, hire a salesman for a large manufacturing firm, who were extending their bashness and opening a warehouse in London, where Mr.
Ope shaw was now to superintend the busl ness. He rather enjoyed the signing of residence, having a kind of curiestly about London which be had never yet been able to gratify in his brief visits to the metropolis.
At the same time he had an add, shrewd con tempt for the inhabitants, women he had always pictured to humself as fine hay people;
caring nothing but for fashion and aristocracy and founding away their days is Bond Street and such places; running good English, and ready in their turn to despise him as a provincial. The hours that the men of busiasse kept in the eity acandalized him too accustomed as he was to the early dinners of Manchester folk, and the consequently ferlonger evenings. Still he was pleased to go. BY CHAS. DICKENS. always spoke of the sten to his friends as on demanded of him by the interests of his em ployers, and sweetened to bim by a conside demanded of him by the interests of his employers, and weetened to bim by a considerable increase of salary.

His salery, indeed, was so Hiberal that he might have been justified in taking a much larger House than this one, had he not thought himself bound to set an example to Londoners of how listle a Manchester man of busices cared for show. Inside, however, he furnished the House with an nousual degree of comfort, and in the winter time he insisted on keeping up as large fires as the grates would allow, in every room where the temprature was in the least chilly. Moreover, his northern sense of hospitality was such that, if he were at home, he could hardly suffer a visitor to leave the house without forcing meat and drink upon him. Every servant in the house was well warmed and well fed, and kindly treated; for their master scorned all petty saving in aught that cooduced to comfort; while he amused himself by following out all accustomed habits and individual ways in defiance of what, any of his new neighbors might think.

His wife was a presty, gentle, woman of suitable age and character. He was forty two, she thirty-five. He was loud and decided, she soft and yealding. They had two obildren, or rather, I should say, she had two; for the elder, a girl of eleven, was lifts. Openshaw's child by frank Wilson, her first husband. The younger was a little boy, Ethvin, who could just pratite, and to whom his father delighted to speak in the broadest and most unintelligible Lancashfre dialect, in order to keep up what he called the true Saron accent.

Mrs. Openshaw's Christian name was Alice on accent.

Mrs. Openshaw's Christian name was Alice

Mrs. Openshaw's Christian name was Alice and her firs husband had been her own cousin. She was the orphan nice of a sea-captain in Liverpoo', a quiet, grave little creature, of great personal attraction when she was fitteen or sixteen, with regular features and a blooming complexion. But she was very shy, and believed herself to be very stupid and awkward; and was frequently scolded by her annt, her own uncle's second wife. So when her counsin, Frank Wilson, came home from a long absence at sea, and first was kind and profective to her; secondly, attraitive; and thirdly, desperately in love with her, she hardly knew how to be greatful enough to him. It is true she would have preferred blaremaining in the first or second slages of behavior; for his violent, love puzzled and frightened her. Her uncle neither helped nor bindered the love affair, though it was going on under his eyes. Frank's step-mother had such a variable temper that there was no knowing whether what she liked one day she would like the next, or not. At length she went fo such extreme crosness that Alice was only lote glad to shut her eyes and run blindly at the chance of escaping from domes it tyranny offered her by a marrirge with her constair, and, litting him better than any one in the world, except her uncle (who was at this time at sea,) she went of one morning and was married to him; the only bridermaid being the homesmaid at her aunt's. The consequence was, that Frank and his wife went into longings, and Mrs. Wilsen refused to seathern and turned sway Norsh, the warmhearted homesmaid; whom they accordingly took into their service. When captain Wilson returned from his voyage, he was very cordial with the your couple, and spent many an evening at their ledgings, smoking his pipe and sipping his greeg; but he told them that for quickness sake, he could not ask them to has own home; for his wife was bilter against them. They were not very unhappy about this.

The seed of future unhappiness lay rather in Frank's vehement, passiona self and her too, in a slighter degree, by apprehension and imaginations of what might befull her during his approaching absence at at sea. At last he went to his father and urgod him to insist upon Aldee's being once more received under his roof; the more ospecially as there was now a prespect of her confinement while her husband was away on his voyage. Captain Wilson was, as he himself expressed it, "breaking up," and unwilling to undergo the exchiement of a seene; yet he felt that what his son said twas true. So he went to his wife. And before Frunk went to sea he had the comfort of seeing his wife installed in her old little garrett in his father's house. To have placed her in the one best pare room was a step beyond Mrs. Wilson's powers of submission or generosity. The worst part about it, however, was that the faithful Norah had to be dismissed. Her place as housemaid had been filled up; and even had it not, she had forfeited Mrs. Wilsons good opinion forever. She comforted her young muster and mistress by pleasant pro-

wo passed the first days of Alice's widow-hood. By-and-by things subsided into their natural tranquil course. But, as if this young creature was always to be in some hasty trouble, her ewe lamb began to be alling, pining, and sickly. The childs mysterfous illness turned out to be some affection of the spine likely to affect health; but not to shorten life—at least so the doctor said. But the long dreary suffering of one whose a mother loves a Alice loved her only child is hard to look forward to. Only Norsh guessed what Alice suffered; no one but God knew. guessed what Alice suffered; no one but God knew.

And so it fell out, that when Mrs. Wilson, the elder, came to her one day in violent distress, occasioned by a very material dumination in the value of the property that her husband had left her—a diminution which made her income barely enough to support herself, much less Alice—the latter could hardly understand how any thing which did not touch health or life could cause such grief; and she recleved the intelligence with irritating compoure. But when, that aftermon the little sick child was brought in, and the grandmother—who after all loved it well—began a tresh moan over her losses to its unconscious ears—eaying how she had planned to consult this or that doctor, and to give it this or that comfort or luxury in after years, but that now all chance of this had passed away—Alice's heart was touched, and she drew near comfort or luxury in after years, but that now all chance of this had passed away—Allee's heart was touched, and she drew mear to Mrs. Wilson with unwonted carresses, and in a spirit not unlike to that of fisth, eatregated, that come what would, they might semain together. After much discussion in succeeding days, it was arranged that Mrs. Wilson os should take a house in Manchester, furnishing it parily with what furniture she had, and providing the rest with Alice's remaining it we hundred pounds. Mrs. Wilson was here self a Manchester woman, and naturaly longitude to hundred pounds. Mrs. Wilson was here self a Manchester woman, and naturaly longitude to the first natural woman of the countries of the household. Norsh, willing a pay pretty hundsomely. Alice undertook the active superintendance and superior work of the household. Norsh, willing faithful Norsh offered to cook, scour, do anything in short to the state of the countries of the household. Norsh, willing faithful Norsh offered to cook, scour, do anything in short to the state of the countries of the little girl's increasing deformity. How that mother loved that child is not for words to tell!

Then came a break of misfortens. Their fodgers left, and no one succeeded to them. After some months they had to remove to a smaller house; and Alice's tender conscience was torn by the idea that she ought not to be a borden to her mother is-law, but ought to go out and reck her own maintainance. And leave tendell ? The thought came like the sweeping boom of a funeral bell over her heart.

By and by Mr. Openshaw came to lodge with them. He had started in life, as the second leave her child! The thought came like the sweeping boom of a funeral bell over her heart.

By and by, Mr. Openshaw came to lodge with them. He had started in life as the errand-boy and sweeper-out of a warehouse; had struggled up through all grades of employment in the place, fighting his way through the hard striving Manebaster. Every spare moment of time had been sterally given up to self teaching. He was a capital accountant, a good French and German scholar, a 'keen, far-seeing tradesman; understanding markets, and the bearing of events, both near and distant, on trade: a not yet, with such vivid attention to present details, that I do not thing he ever saw a group of flowers in the fields without thinking whether their colors would, or would not, form harmonions contracts in the coming spring mailine and prints. He went to debating societies, and throw himself with all his heart and soul into polities; esteeming, it must be owned, every man a fool or a knawe who differed from him, and overtrowing his opponents rather by the loud streagth of his language than the calm strength of his logic. There was something of the Tankee in all this. Indeed his theory ran parallel to the famous Yankee motto—"England flegs creation, and Manebester flogs England." Such a man, as may be fancled, hud had no time for falling fillow, or any such nonsense. At the age when most young men ge through their courting and matrimous had not the means of keeping a wife, and was far to practical to think of baving one. And now that he was in easy circumstances, a rising man, he considered women almost as encumbrances to the world with whom a man had better have as little to do as possible. His first imprecision of Alice about her to make it distinct. "A preity yea may kind of woman," would have been his description of her, if he had been pushed into a corner. He was rather afraid, in the begining, that her quiet ways arose from a histeness and increased in the second of the second of
